JOSH MANDOLI

Josh Mandoli reached out to a coworker for details about a valve he did not fully understand. This directly influenced the coworker to re-examine the purpose and function of the valve. The additional research resulted in an opportunity to modernize and simplify the carbon seal water system.

The changes that are being implemented will have a material impact on the complexity, reliability, and maintenance of a critical system.

These improvements are a direct result of Josh's diligence, attention to details, and personal ownership of the entire system, within the current project.

Josh has shown stewardship in the workplace by caring about mechanical items, how they work, and their impact, even though he is focused as an electrical engineer. True stewardship requires the wholistic approach he takes with respect to his projects.
