CHRISTOPHER LAMB

Questions arose regarding employee access and proximity to electrical equipment on the deck of both Rock Island powerhouses as well as Rocky Reach. Governing rules for these facilities are covered in the National Electric Safety Code (NESC). Christopher performed an in-depth review of the NESC as it applies to this equipment and the various classes of workers who have access to the equipment. Christopher wrote a white paper on the subject and hired a highly qualified NESC consultant to review the work and provide additional recommendations. Numerous employees from different departments were also involved in the effort and provided information for Christopher to evaluate and include in the report. The consultant agreed with the conclusions that Christopher laid out in the report and provided a few additional recommendations. Christopher's work helped clarify the requirements regarding authorized access to these areas and confirmed the clearances to energized equipment meet the NESC rules.

KRISTIN LODGE

Salmon Festival was typically an annual event, hosted by Leavenworth National Fish Hatchery, to provide environmental and cultural education opportunities for elementary schools and students throughout the Valley and the State

Due to construction activities at the fish hatchery, the location of the festival was moved to Rocky Reach dam on short notice. Kristin and her staff, worked very hard to accommodate all the needs of the Salmon Fest board, tribal participants and the attending schools. Additionally, the local air quality issues experienced over the last week added new hurdles to overcome in the last days leading up to the festival. I am grateful to Kristin for all her hard work and pulling off a well coordinated event.
